One Good Turn

When I was 19, I was travelling alone in the Rocky Mountain States of the USA. In order to save money, I was carrying a small tent in my rucksack and I went hitch-hiking from campsite to campsite. When my tent was packed, it was no bigger than a loaf of bread and weighed only as much as a bag of flour. As a result, it was very convenient to carry but not particularly comfortable to sleep in.

One night, I found myself in a large campsite in the Yellowstone National Park. It was not really designed for tents so much as camper vans, and most of the area was surfaced with tarmac or gravel. However, after a while I managed to find a good patch of grass and set up my tent for the night.

I prepared myself a meal on my tiny gas stove and then packed all of my food in a secure bag and hung it from the branch of a tree. This was the recommended procedure to prevent the food attracting the attention of wild animals, especially grizzly bears. Apparently, these creatures were frequent visitors to the campsite, and there were loud speakers distributed around the campsite to raise the alarm if one of them was seen walking into the area.

Sometime after nightfall – it must have been about 9:30 pm – I crawled into my tent and into my sleeping bag. It was rather early to sleep, but I had nothing else to do, so I closed my eyes and dozed off. I was woken up some time later by a loud siren - it was the grizzly bear alarm. I was terrified – my little tent provided no protection against a bear, but I had nowhere else to go. All I could do was stay silent and hope it would not notice me.

Fortunately, one of my neighbours in one of the large camper vans nearby realised the danger I was in. He came over to my tent and invited me to join him and his family in their van. I was a little bit wary about accompanying a complete stranger into a van, but the alternative was much worse, so I got out of the tent and followed him.

Once inside the van, the stranger identified himself as Jim, and he introduced me to his wife, son and daughter. We sat at the table chatting over cups of cocoa and eating homemade biscuits. Then, out came a pack of cards, and we taught each other card games from our respective home countries. By the time everybody was ready for bed, I felt like part of the family. They invited me to sleep on the floor of the van, so I rushed over to my tent to fetch my sleeping bag. In the process, I noticed that the bag of food I had so carefully hung in the tree had been broken open and the food had been taken. While I had been sitting with my friends in the van, there had been a visit from the bear, and it had been tall enough to reach the bag. Jim and his family probably saved my life!

1 The writer's tent was small before it was packed. _____
2 The writer couldn't find a place to camp at first because of all the vans. _____
3 The writer hung the food in the tree to hide the strong smell. _____
4 The writer didn't accept Jim's invitation at first. _____
5 The writer and Jim were from different countries. _____
